Abstract

On February 27, 2015, as part of the Agricultural Growth Act, amendments to the Canada's Plant Breeders' Rights (PBRs) Act came into force, making Canada compliant with Union for the Protection of the New Varieties of Plants (UPOV) 91. One objective of adopting UPOV 91 was that it would encourage increased investment in plant breeding, giving Canadian farmers greater access to new and innovative plant varieties that enable them to be more globally competitive. To assess whether the adoption of UPOV 91

- November 4th 2024.

Justification of why an extended period is required to complete the thesis

- The third paper of my thesis has taken longer to complete than I expected because it was a completely new methodology for me.
- The methodology in question is not frequently used in the field of public policy research. This delayed the analysis and write up of the third paper of my thesis delaying my overall thesis.
